Who are Sex Traffick Victims?

Youth who are victims of sex trafficking can be in situations that one would not expect. Victims can be tricked by intimate partners, family members, peers or a marriage proposition. Some of the risk factors for youth include:

- Runaways
- Isolation
- Emotional distress
- Homelessness
- Poverty
- Family dysfunction
- Substance abuse
- Bullying
- Rejection by peers and/or family
- Community violence
- Physical abuse and neglect
- Mental illness
- Learning disabilities
- Developmental delay
- Childhood sexual abuse
- Promotion of sexual exploitation by family members or peers
- Lack of social support

Without someone to take notice of red flags, youth can easily fall into these dangerous environments. Victims of human trafficking come from all walks of life and can be anyone, regardless of race, color, national origin, disability, religion, age, gender, sexual orientation, gender identity, socioeconomic status, or citizenship status. Traffickers frequently prey on individuals who are poor, vulnerable, living in an unsafe situation, or are in search of a better life.

Federal Protections Against Trafficking

Federal law 18 U.S.C. § 1591(a)(1) makes it a crime when a person “recruits, entices, harbors, transports, provides, obtains, advertises, maintains, patronizes, or solicits by any means” a minor for the purpose of a commercial sex act. There is no requirement to prove that force, fraud, or coercion was used to secure the victim’s actions if the victim is a minor. The law has been refined and strengthened since its enactment in 2000 and reflects the best approach to criminalizing child sex trafficking. State laws that address this crime specifically and separately from other criminal sex offenses avoid the confusion of relying on a patchwork of laws that were not crafted specifically to apply in these cases and help law enforcement identify, investigate, and prosecute these crimes.
Child sex trafficking cannot, and should not, be addressed solely at the federal level. States must engage their law enforcement and prosecutors to fight this crime at the state level with laws providing penalties for offenders and protections for victims comparable to those provided under federal law. Lack of a child sex trafficking law creates gaps that allow victims to slip through unidentified and unprotected and allow their exploiters to continue their crimes unimpeded. Child sex trafficking offenses may violate a broad range of state laws, but clearly making the purchase and sale of children for sex acts a separate crime is essential to effectively combatting child sex trafficking.

To date, Connecticut laws do not align with all aspects of the federal Trafficking Victims Protection Act (TVPA). The TVPA allows for buyers to be charged with trafficking for the exchange of anything of value, however, Connecticut law only holds the buyer accountable for trafficking if the sex act is for a fee.

When laws do not clearly criminalize commercial exchange for sex with children, the victims are more likely to be misidentified and consequently denied important protections under the law. Services should be coordinated across multiple service sectors. States need to establish a baseline knowledge of human trafficking and victim services and support the development of effective responses to the needs of human trafficking victims.

Federal agencies are aware of the intersection between child welfare and juvenile justice systems and human trafficking. Service providers and others who work with trafficking victims report that a significant percentage of trafficked minors have been involved in the child welfare and juvenile justice systems. This makes it even more critical to have cross-agency collaboration.

Data in Connecticut

The Department of Children and Families has a Human Anti-trafficking Response Team (HART) that ensures the child and family have the most efficient and responsive approach during the most difficult times. In 2018, HART received 210 referrals. At the time of exploitation, youth were in the following place of residence:

- Parent/Guardian Home - 133
- Foster home - 38
- Congregate care - 20
- AWOL/Runaway - 7
- Detention - 1
- Missing/Unknown - 7
- Relative/Other Home - 4
- Shelter - 0

The Race/Ethnicity data for 2018 are:

- African American/Black - 39
- Caucasian - 55
- Hispanic - 96
- Asian - 0
- Multi-racial - 18
- Other - 1
- Unknown - 0

The JuST Response Council and Shared Hope International have developed a Protective Response Model for States to consider in developing plans that provide the highest level of compassion and care. The 10 Protective Response Model Premises are:

- Non-criminalization
- Trauma-informed
- Empowerment approach
- Safety concerns addressed
- Proactive identification efforts
- Flexible
- Accessible array of funded, specialized services
- Established protocols
- Continuity and consistency in support
- Ongoing monitoring and evaluation

It is important to have a safety and services plan and have adequate resources available to meet the array of services that victims may need. Ideally, communities should have a plan with programs tailored and informed to meet the needs of sex trafficking.
victims, providing a range of services equipped through training, education and funding to connect that young person to the most appropriate service plan.

Myths and Misconceptions

There are many misconceptions surrounding human trafficking that need to be debunked:

- Only women are victims
- Victim knew what they were getting themselves into
- Victim had freedom of movement and opportunities to escape
- If a trafficked person consented to be in their initial situation, they cannot be trafficked.
- Victims are always poor
- It can't be trafficking when the trafficker and victim are related, married or in an intimate relationships
- Human trafficking victims will self-identify
- US citizens are not trafficked outside of the US
- US citizens cannot be trafficking victims – only foreign nationals or immigrants can be trafficked
- Trafficking must involve some form of travel, transportation or movement across state or national borders
- Victim was paid for services
- Human Trafficking is only Sex Trafficking

For some children whose lives are otherwise characterized by instability and lack of safety or security, schools can and should be safe havens. Possible behavioral indicators include:

- an inability to attend school on a regular basis and/or unexplained absences
- frequently running away from home
- references made to frequent travel to other cities
- bruises or other signs of physical trauma, withdrawn behavior, depression, anxiety, or fear
- lack of control over a personal schedule and/or identification or travel documents
- hunger, malnourishment, or inappropriate dress (based on weather conditions or surroundings)
- signs of drug addiction
- coached or rehearsed responses to questions
- a sudden change in attire, behavior, relationships, or material possessions (e.g., expensive items)
- uncharacteristic promiscuity and/or references to sexual situations or terminology beyond age-specific norms
- a "boyfriend" or "girlfriend" who is noticeably older and/or controlling
- an attempt to conceal scars, tattoos, or bruises
- a sudden change in attention to personal hygiene
- shyness

Therefore, teachers, principals, social workers and all school staff have an opportunity to identify behaviors that might indicate a child or youth is being trafficked. "I had a feeling that my teacher knew something was wrong in my life. I would notice her looking at me...almost like she wanted to say something to me. I wanted to open up to her, but I was afraid she would judge me. I was afraid that she wouldn't understand." – Child sex trafficking survivor, 16 years old

Training is available for both adults and youth. The DCF’s HART has developed training for Law Enforcement, Emergency Medical Services, Emergency Medicine, and Foster Parents. HART also has specific curricula for youth: Youth Awareness on Child Trafficking, and Youth Prevention - Not a #Number. Anyone interested in these trainings should contact DCFHART@ct.gov.
The Youth Survivor

In most cases, victims’ perception of justice for themselves differed from their perceptions of justice for their traffickers. Many did not support traditional forms for justice for traffickers and felt instead, that justice should be focused on prevention. Many survivors felt the best form of justice for them is “the ability to move on from their trafficking experiences and find autonomy and empowerment through achieving self-defined goals”.

In addition, youth survivors of domestic sex trafficking shared some of the perspectives of the process and what was important to them. Many of them had high levels of distrust often due to past mistreatment at the hands of law enforcement and others.

The biggest surprise for some reading this brief many be the things survivors had to say about their experience.

“I don’t want people getting hurt like the same way I get hurt....It doesn’t matter where you’re from or where you come. I don’t want any human being to go through what I went through”. (Site 6, survivor 8, survivor of labor trafficking)

“For me, justice does not mean that my trafficker [is] put in jail or pay the consequences of the thing that she did to me. For me, justice is my freedom, for me to be able to do anything that I want”. (Site 7, survivor 4, survivor of labor trafficking)

“I want to move forward, change my life....I just want to forget when I was a victim. Now I’m not a victim anymore. Now I can do whatever I want when I feel like it”. (Site 6, survivor 8, survivor of labor trafficking)

In addition, the following are major themes shared by youth survivors:

Youth Survivor Perspective – Major Themes

- Youth survivors had a fear of law enforcement and expressed that their limited exposure was due to a lack of trust and negative experiences with being treated as criminals. Victims did not see police as a place for help.
- Comfort was paramount! Survivors desired a balance of rules and comfort given the important role that service providers play in their lives. The youth emphasized that an honest opinion was needed along with a longer term support system. The adults in their lives changed often and bonds were frequently broken.
- The message to Judges was to look beyond what is on paper and listen to the survivor’s perspective. Youth wanted to be more involved in the process and to speak directly to the Judge. “Judges typically lock up youth,” which youth were open about and cited as the reason to continue running.
- Survivors overwhelmingly agreed that they did not have a say in the types of services received, nor did they feel in control of their own lives/care.

What still needs to be done

Connecticut is in need of stronger legislation that will ensure child victims are treated as such and ensure traffickers are prosecuted. Shared Hope International produces an annual report card based on the Protected Innocence Challenge Legislative Framework, and sets a national standard of protection against domestic minor sex trafficking. In 2018, Connecticut dropped from a B to a C with a score of 79. (You can learn more about the legislative framework at sharedhope.org/reportcards.) That’s not acceptable.

Since 2012, Connecticut has passed laws intended to strengthened the protections for victims of human trafficking but are missing some important components. For example, the “rape shield” law, which reduces the trauma of cross-examination for testifying victims does NOT extend to child victims of sex trafficking. Existing legislation details can be found at cga.ct.gov and search Trafficking in Persons under Bill Information:

- PA 13-166 An Act Concerning Sexual Exploitation and Trafficking in Persons
- PA 14-186 An Act Concerning the Department of Children and Families and the Protection of Children
- PA 15-195 An Act Strengthening Protections for Victims of Human Trafficking
- PA 16-71 An Act Concerning Human Trafficking
- PA 17-32 An Act Concerning Human Trafficking
- PA 17-129 An Act Concerning the Receipt of Annual Reports on Anti-Human Trafficking from Law Enforcement Agencies

The biggest needs in Connecticut are better and expanded laws around protections for victims and prosecution of buyers, additional provider services, schools ensuring their staff are trained as mandated by existing law and allowing youth education into the schools. Current legislation does not define and address some important distinctions made in the federal TVPA around its definition of a commercial sex act. In Connecticut, it is isolated to the exchange of sex for a fee. The TVPA is specific in denoting it as "anything of value". This is important in that much sex trafficking is for the purpose of food, shelter and other perceived protections. Because of the narrowness of the language, buyers are not prosecuted many times because there has been no fee exchanged. True “services and protections” are often not sought by the victims because they are afraid the information will be held against them. Unfortunately, with a lack of information provided, services are denied and those children return to the streets without support and services.

For details on each law, resources, training and much more information, please visit portal.ct.gov/DCF/HART/Home.

This Issue Brief is a collaboration with Tammy Sneed with the Department of Children and Families. Tow Youth Justice Institute thanks Tammy for her content and expertise!

Sources
1. Human Trafficking in America’s Schools, US Department of Education, January 2015
4. Connecticut: Efforts to Combat Human Trafficking, Department of Health and Human Services, Office on Women’s Health, Administration for Children and Families Office on Trafficking in Persons, August 31, 2017
5. Human Trafficking and the Runaway and Homeless Youth Population, The National Network for Youth
6. 2017 Statistics from the National Human Trafficking Hotline and BeFree Textline, Polaris, December 31, 2017
9. Identifying Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking Victims in Connecticut, Connecticut Department of Children and Families, DCF Careline
10. Domestic Minor Sex Trafficking and the Law, Connecticut Department of Children and Families, DCF Careline
12. Trafficking in Persons Council, State of Connecticut General Assembly, Gilchrest, J., MSW, Council Chair, January, 2019
15. CT law brings more arrests, awareness of human trafficking,, Greenwich Time, January 14, 2019

The Tow Youth Justice Institute is a university, state and private partnership established to lead the way in juvenile justice reform through collaborative planning, training, research and advocacy.

Please visit our website at newhaven.edu/towyouth and follow us on social media @towyouth or call 203-932-7361 with questions or for more information.